PredictWallStreet forecasts beat the market! Money:Tech conference attendees invited to join PredictWallStreet's prediction community

Can the collective intelligence of online investors really generate an edge on the market? Yes, it can, according to PredictWallStreet's latest performance report. The report shows that PredictWallStreet's daily prediction forecasts beat the S&P500 by more than 40% over the last three months, excluding trading costs. Details of this market-beating performance are being released during the Money:Tech Conference, Feb. 6-7, in New York City.

"PredictWallStreet started making forecasts on the price movements on a select set of securities back in July 2006, using patented and proprietary algorithms and our historical database of prediction data," said PredictWallStreet CEO, Dr. Craig Kaplan. "Since May 24, 2007 we have made our daily forecasts available to users on our site, free of charge. The daily forecasts predict that individual stocks and indices will close either higher or lower than the opening price. Since daily forecasts are released to the public before the market opens, these are forward-looking forecasts that can be proved right or wrong each day."

PredictWallStreet invites attendees at the Money:Tech Conference to pick up a copy of its new performance report, and to add their own insights and opinions about their favorite securities to PredictWallStreet's prediction community. Investors may be interested not only in PredictWallStreet's daily forecasts but also in sentiment polls covering more than 8,000 securities. Additionally, Community Sentiment graphs show how community sentiment changes over time for particular securities. PredictWallStreet also calculates Accuracy Ratings which help highlight predictors who've been especially accurate on predicting specific stocks in the past. Currently all of this information is available free of charge on www.predictwallstreet.com.
